Course connections (prerequisites, parallelism): Philosophy of Photography
Aim and principles of the course: The aim of the course is to have a better understanding of European, especially Central European photo-history through lectures from different perspectives. The invited lecturers from various countries and institutes are asked to talk about their research and their results in relation to the history of photography. The presentations will give an insight into the different research topics and methods that give guidelines for the students for their own studies. The course will lay the foundations for students to work on the photo-historical aspect of their thesis, based on in-depth texts and literature work.
Learning outcomes (professional and general competences to be developed): Knowledge: They understand the importance of analytical, critical, and historical thinking. Their knowledge is characterised by a broad spectrum of knowledge and a high level of literacy. Ability: Based on the experience gained during their studies, they are able to analyse, process, and manage basic knowledge, and to express their own opinions and critical approach within their own field of art (photography). They have the ability to collect and interpret relevant data for the development of their creative concept. Attitude: They think critically, looking for correlations of contexts. They strive to be informed. They persist with their found themes, understanding the role of time in becoming independent artists and authors. Autonomy and responsibility: They research and develop their professional skills independently. Committed to learning and understanding the historical achievements of photography.
Topics and themes to be covered in the course: The History of Photography course is a series of lectures in which international experts talk about their specific topics in their fields of research: collections, institutions, eras, movements and case studies in the history of photography and art. The lectures of the semester-long programme have been compiled in such a way as to present as many European, Central and Eastern European institutions, periods, and artistic attitudes as possible to provide useful and personal inspiration for the students. The lecturers are invited to give presentations on their current research in their institutions and its historical aspect, art-photographic trends, so that students can learn about the methods and research areas of different countries and institutions, and thus could make comparative analyses of their own institutions as well as their previous experiences and knowledge of photo history. What are the similarities and differences between photographic attitudes, trends, the establishment and development of collections, institutes and of the way they operate in different countries?

In addition to the exchange of knowledge, meeting the invited lecturers will provide an opportunity for personal discussions, dialogues, questions, and debates. The lecturers invited to the course are important actors and organisers of the international photographic scene: academics, writers, curators, whose in-depth theoretical knowledge, research work and achievements are important information for the knowledge of photo history and for understanding the trends and interconnections of today.
